

Call for Entries: Paula Marshall's People Centered Organization 2010

Who Is Paula Marshall?

Paula is has been the CEO of the Bama Companies, Inc for 25 years. She has been a trailblazer in the areas of quality, employee retention and employee satisfaction. The Bama Companies won the Malcolm Baldrige Award from the United States Department of Commerce in 2004. Paula's new book "Finding the Soul of Big Business" is focused on bringing a more trusting and compassionate workplace to America. With this award, Paula would like to recognize forward thinking organizations that understand the value of their team members.

Background Information

What is a people-centered organization? Well, it's one that:

- Structures its policies and culture around its employees.
- Sees fairness and balance as a priority.
- Makes cuts elsewhere instead of doing layoffs.
- Values its employees as much as its customers.
- Understands that when we all work together, success is inevitable.

Sadly, people-centered organizations are in the minority in today's business climate, which is why we would like to recognize a business that has this business philosophy.

Rules and Eligibility
